Module overview

This team-taught module equips students with musicological and aural skills through the examination of repertoire, styles, literature, concepts and discourse to better understand the effect of these on society. It is delivered via lectures, workshops and seminars. Students will investigate the parameters through which we consume and construct music, how we communicate their use, the social, commercial and contextual issues surrounding them, and the manner in which we can employ these parameters in popular music practice. The module seeks to challenge the students' understanding of how music is constructed, used and interpreted within popular culture.

Aims

This module forms part of the Contextual Studies strand of the programme and addresses core musical and academic skills that support the students' specialist study with particular reference to their pathway.

The module aims to:

2. Explore, evaluate and apply the core musical skills (associated with relevant repertoire if appropriate).
3. Develop an understanding of repertoire and where appropriate, explore its social and cultural context.
